

June 16, 2011

You may know me as the founder of Domini Social Investments, but for the last 25 years, I have also served as a private trustee and wealth manager at The Sustainability Group. Over the past five years, we have added considerable resources to our capacity for impactful investments directly into communities at risk or in support of innovative ideas. We are proud to be one of the largest private client managers specializing in SRI's third leg, with over $40 million invested in credit unions, community banks and loan funds, international microfinance, and most recently, slow money types of investments.

The Sustainability Group has placed deposits in established community development credit unions across the nation that serve as essential advocates for economic justice within their communities. We have also made investments in smaller Native American and women-focused credit unions, serving equally important roles. Our group lends funds that provide critical capital to projects as diverse as affordable housing and daycare in inner cities, cooperative farming and food systems, green businesses, and artisan communities in Appalachia. The microfinance investments help empower the disenfranchised globally. The local, sustainable agriculture investments help some clients support the farmer next door. Over the years, we have built strong relationships with many of these organizations, some for well over 20 years, enabling Sustainability Group clients to witness the positive impact their investments have made on human dignity and ecological sustainability.

Sincerely yours,

Amy Domini